Northwestern Women's Lacrosse Team Turns Water into Wine

By Sam Gutelle

EVANSTON – Several members of the Northwestern Women's Lacrosse Team, who (hopefully) just won their fifth national championship in as many years, are able to turn water into wine and perform other miracles, according to several sources close to the team.

"We went to a party to celebrate the championship," said senior leader Hannah Nielsen, "but it was already dry. Luckily, that's no problem for us. They fetched us some tap water, and the party really got started." Attendees of the party were amazed at the quality of the wine, and the iridescent rays of light that beamed down upon the team as they performed the miracle.

Later, team members were seen playing a quick pickup game of lacrosse on top of Lake Michigan. "They were just running and jumping on top of the water like Jesus or something," said passing sophomore Jacob Herman, "I've never seen anything like it."

God, creator of the universe, was equally impressed by the team's impressive feats. "Yeah, I created the world in seven days," explained the benevolent deity, "but five straight national championships? From a Midwest school? Are you kidding me?"

With the lacrosse season out of the way, the team should have more free time for personal matters. "I'm planning on ending world hunger, myself," explained team member Katrina Dowd, "but everyone has their own goals. I think Hannah [Nielsen] mentioned dying for our sins or something, whatever that means."

Paper Clip Found Mauled on Side of Road

By Ken Marelson

SKOKIE – The corpse of a local paper clip was found dead on the side of Interstate 94 late last night. The condition of the body made it difficult to recognize. After reconstructive analysis, the clip was identified as Clippy [actual name], a local office assistant. The last known photograph of the victim is shown below.

"While I won't comment on the condition of the body, I will say that he won't be helping anyone format any outlines in the near future," said the police officer on the scene, Roland Graham. "Poor bastard."

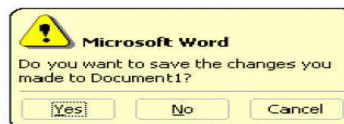

Evidence from the scene seems to indicate foul play. Aside from various baseball bats and crowbars, there was a boom box discovered at the scene, playing only "Die muthafucka die" on a loop.

Further research into the background of the victim has produced his hometown of Seattle, Washington. Residents from his neighborhood remember him as a tiny and extremely helpful.

"Whenever I would sit on my porch to write my Christmas card or send a note to my cousin, he would always walk by and ask, 'It looks like you're writing a letter. Want some help?'" said former Seattle resident Josie Summerstein. "He was so cute. I mean, he never really gave me any good advice, and in retrospect he pretty much screwed everything up all the time, but I appreciated the effort, you know?"

Memorial services will be held at Watson & Jackson Waste and Recycling Services, 2015 Washington Boulevard, from 5 to 9 PM.

Cheney Defends Torture Policies, Jim Crow Laws, Compromise of 1850

By Melvin Schwarzenoggole

WASHINGTON – In yet another press conference, former Vice-President Dick Cheney reiterated his support for George W. Bush's torture policies, comparing them to other unpopular legislation that was once heavily supported.

"President Bush's stance on torture regarding Guantanamo Bay detainees is not unlike the Jim Crow Laws of the 19th and 20th centuries," said Cheney to a room of 250 reporters from all around the world. "They both did a lot of good for a lot of people, and they've both received a bad rap ever since a black man or two started complaining."

When asked if he would be in favor of reinstating the Jim Crow Laws and torture of Guantanamo detainees, Cheney responded with the following:

"...there's nothing in the Constitution that explicitly forbids any kind of punishment just because it is cruel or unusual"

"If we can go through the policy and conclude that it's constitutional, we should do what we can to reinstitute old policies that are being tossed aside by the liberal majority. If we would just reconsider the idea of torture, we would realize that there's nothing in the Constitution that explicitly forbids any kind of punishment just because it is cruel or unusual."

Cheney's next press conference, scheduled to be given this Thursday from Capitol Hill, will be on the importance of good cardiovascular health and reinstating the Compromise of 1850.

Ask The Flipside

Dear Northwestern Flipside,

All of my friends are already home from school. Will I ever get to go home?

Your number one fan,
Randolph K. Hassenpfeffer

Well, Randy (I'm going to call you Randy whether you like it or not), the answer is quite simple: NO. You are in fact stuck here until you graduate. There is a secret clause in the housing agreement stating that all students are forbidden from being at home for more than a month while their high school friends are also out of school. To enforce this, small explosives have been woven into all Northwestern apparel. If you remain in your hometown with any acquaintances you knew before entering Northwestern, the explosives will arm. The only way to keep them from detonating is to return to campus. You will be confined to an isolation room in the 28th sub-basement of Tech until you have received at least 5 text messages from friends at home asking if you want to hang out, at which point you will be released and enrolled in four sections of organic chemistry until your brain melts and you forget what your home even looks like. -Want to Ask The Flipside a question?
